PUBLIC HUMANITIES & ADVOCACY PROJECTS

This Land is Your Land: Cooper Square Community Land Trust History Project, Creator, 2017-2019

I organized a team of student researchers in a four-fold process of advocacy and documentation in collaboration with the Cooper Square Committee, Cooper Square Mutual Housing Association, and Cooper Square Community Land Trust. These include: a) Conducting oral histories with long-time Lower East Side residents and advocates for the expansion of a community land trust, b) The production of historical reports on the Lower East Side's recently deconsecrated Church of the Nativity and the life and impact of Dorothy Day, the church's former parishioner and co-founder of the Catholic Worker movement on the Lower East Side, c) Promotional videos for use in community town halls, as well as with city officials and media outlets, d) Participation in a local exhibition on architecture and sites of resistance at The Loisaida Center.

Melrose Oral History Project/South Bronx Cultural History Walking Tour, Creator,

2017-Present

As a result of oral history and place-based research conducted in my course, (Dis)Placed Urban Histories, in 2017 and 2018, I am working with Women's Housing and Economic Development Corporation (WHEDco) in the South Bronx to develop signage and maps for a walking tour of sites proposed by community members as "places of significance." The project has already resulted in an on-line archive using Omeka and a series of entries in the historical mapping app, Clio.

Displaced Histories: Stories of the Southside, Creator, 2015-2016

In the first two iterations of the course, (Dis)Placed Urban Histories, in Spring 2015 and Spring 2016, students were charged with historicizing the process of gentrification in South Williamsburg, Brooklyn, through archival research and oral history. This course was offered in collaboration with Southside United HDFC, also known as "Los Sures." In spring 2015, students produced an exhibit on-site in South Williamsburg, tracing the history of the neighborhood from European settlement to the present. In spring 2016, students were matched with long-time neighborhood residents to co-produce oral histories and an archive, which were hosted on an Omeka site. The students also mounted an exhibit on-site in South Williamsburg.

Urban Listeners Working Group, Founder, 2016-Present

Founded at New York University and hosted by The Graduate Center of the City University of New York in collaboration with New York University's Urban Democracy Lab between fall 2017 and spring 2018, the Urban Listeners (titled "City Amplified" at CUNY) working group invites oral history practitioners, artists, archivists, and scholars to examine how radical archiving practices can amplify the rich range of oral history and place-based research projects occurring across New York City. Upon its return to New York University in Fall 2018, the working group has re-focused on community history for the purposes of social justice advocacy.

Humanizing Data Symposium, Organizer, 2016

This day-long symposium examined how humanities scholars and activists can use data and digital strategies to enhance and disrupt the kinds of research questions, methods, and narratives that define the humanities. Its aim was to rethink alliances, forge stronger and more equal relationships between university-affiliated researchers and community-based organizations, and amplify opportunities to share both resources and authorship with one another. Featured projects and presenters included Dr. Kimon Keramides (NYU) and Jonathan Ned Katz on "Queering the Web," Dr. Jack Tchen (Rutgers-Newark) and Heather Lee (NYU, Shanghai) on "Decolonizing Data," Dr. Caleb Elfenbein (Grinnell College) on Mapping Islamophobia and Erin McElroy of the Anti-eviction Mapping Project, and Gergely Baics and Leah Meisterlin on historical mapping as “digital activism.”
